Download License Key.Q: Check for a variable number of params I'm trying to find a way to run a method if it has at least two (and at most two) parameters. There's a method setName() which accepts a String, of course. But there's also a method setName(String, String) which accepts a String, a String. At the moment I have: String name = getName(); if(name!=

null) { setName(name); } else { // Bad name. } I don't like this; it feels kind of hacky. If I were using a Collection, I could just iterate it, but that's not what I'm doing. Is there anything like: List params = getParams(); if(params.size() >= 2) { // Good. } The problem is that the class defining the setters has a good number of them. If there were only two, I could simply say: setName(String); setName(String, String); Instead of: setName(String); setName(String, String); setName(String, String); setName(String, String); ... It looks like, the logic of my program is simply a variation on this. It seems to me there should be
